Mullingar Facts and History

- Mullingar has a current population of 19,794 (2011 Census).
- The town of Mullingar was founded by the Normans 800 years ago.
- The original population was a mixture of Gaelic Irish and French, English, Welsh, Flemish and Breton immigrants.
- In 1575, Plague decimated the population and, in 1597, the town was completely burned by the O'Neills.
- In 1806, a transport revolution was brought to the town with the completion of the Royal Canal, followed by the railway in 1848.
- During the First World War, scores of Mullingar men served in the armed forces and many were killed or injured. The town was also a major military training depot.

James Barton died on 20 February 1883, aged 75 years, from bronchitis and senile decay. His daughter Eliza Martin was in attendance at James's death.

It appears that Margaret Barton, who was also suffering from senile decay may have been moved into care at the nearby workhouse at Kedington.

The master of the workhouse was James Hale who was most likely a relative or connection to the family as one of Margaret's grand-daughters was married to a Joseph Hale.

Margaret Barton died at the workhouse on 7 February 1884 aged 78 years, her death being listed as caused by senile decay.
